Oxldes: Weight percentages by X-ray fluorescence supplemented by methods described in U.S. Geological Survey Bulletin 1144-A Analysts: Paul L. D. Elmore, Lowell Artis, and H. Smith holocrystalline mesostasis of sodic feldspar and (or) alkalic feldspar, quartz, and scattered flakes of palebrown biotite are characteristic of these flows (figs. 35, 36). These patches appear devitrified, but as similar patches occur in flows of all ages, they may not be time dependent. Perhaps they are related to conditions during cooling, such as local accumulations of volatiles. Similar holocrystalline patches are common in the flows of Mount Rainier (C. A. Hopson, oral commun., 1965). MINERALOGY QUARTZ The ubiquitous occurrence of partially resorbed quartz crystals (fig. 37) makes a xenocrystic origin unlikely. In the lavas bearing the holocrystalline groundmass patches, resorbed quartz phenocrysts are commonly surrounded by a halo of holocrystalline material similar to the patches, which suggests that the quartz was reacting with the melt in situ. In a few flows, partially resorbed quartz is surrounded by reaction rims of small crystals of pyroxene. X-ray diffraction studies indicate cristobalite is present in the groundmass...
